December 6th Free Lunch and Learn: Essential Gear for Project Managers Register now!

Dear RefineM,

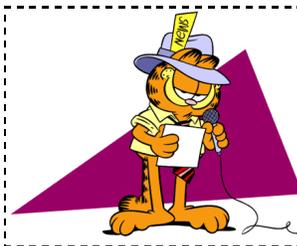

In the past couple of years, I have been thinking how to pass on my knowledge and experience to other project managers to help them deliver their projects successfully. PMI's PMBOK describes 47 processes, but in my experience a smaller subset of processes can be all that is needed to deliver projects successfully. I invite you to join my next monthly Virtual Lunch & Learn Webinar where I talk about such a minimal set of processes, called Essential Gear for Project Managers. The Essential Gear for Project Managers is not only useful for PMs at individual level but it also provides a head start for emerging PMOs.

You'll also find the article on communication management not only interesting but useful too. If you are a PMP and looking for ways to earn PDUs, the blog on PDUs is for you. Now you have access to our past newsletters in case you did not receive them; enjoy this and all past newsletters.

Wishing you Merry Christmas and a very happy New Year.

Time and cost delays can happen due to poor communication of work package items. Scope changes can occur if different stakeholders have different perceptions of project goals.

PM Quote

First, have a definite, clear practical ideal; a goal, an objective.
Second, have the necessary means to achieve your ends; wisdom, money, materials, and methods. Third, adjust all your means to that end.
